Field Visit

7 – 12 December 2015, Costa Rica

Instructors: Prof. Jan Breitling & Prof. Mihir
Kanade

This e-learning and field-based experience provides participants with the opportunity to study the intersections of the environment and human rights through a six-week online course and visit to Costa Rica, a country known for its leadership in this field. The e-learning course focuses on the educational, legal and social aspects of the relationship between the environment and human rights. The field visit will explore the intersections between different elements of the human rights and environment agenda, with focus on a holistic approach to sustainable development. This programme is intended for environmental and human rights academics, advocates, and practitioners who seek a balance of education and work at the institutional and community levels. It is also possible to participate only in the e-learning or the field components.
