Resilience, Humanitarian Action and Human Development

16 September-27 October 2015
Deadline for early registration discount: 1 June 2015

Register now!

Who should take this course?
The course is intended for staff members of local, national, and international humanitarian and development organizations who are interested in exploring and discussing various concepts of resilience and their impact on humanitarian action and local communities. You can expect to spend 4-6 hours per week on the course.

This e-learning course examines the debate around resilience and where it intersects with the humanitarian aid and development sectors. It analyses resilience through case studies and examines the impact of various concepts of resilience on humanitarian action and local communities.

In this 6-week course, participants will:

- Interact with participants and the instructor in discussion forums and live webinars
- Access resources to read, watch, or browse
- Assess learning through quizzes and assignments
- Earn a certificate of completion for meeting the requirements

After the course, participants will be able to:

- assess the connections and gaps between current understandings of resilience and rights-based approaches;
- develop a framework for resilience applicable to their own contexts;
- understand resilience as a framework within humanitarian action from a rights-based perspective.

Tuition fee for participants: US$ 495; for auditors: US$ 195

Since 2002, over 9,500 professionals have successfully participated in HREA’s e-learning courses.

HREA — the global human rights education and training centre